"What is Expediency?"

The Church's Source of Authority
The Use of Implications

We saw that the Bible teaches us and thus authorizes a particular belief and or practice in 3 ways. There are direct statements of biblical truth, explicitly stated positive commands or negative prohibitions and approved apostolic or NT examples. These are the 3 relatively easy ways for us to know and do that which is pleasing to God. This week we are going to finish our study of the church's source of authority by considering valid implications and expediency.

Inferences or Implication, it is readily admitted, is a method of establishing Bible authority which meets with far less agreement than those previously mentioned, it does not, however, lessen our need for its use. What is an inference or implication? An inference or implication is an essential conclusion drawn from the data supplied by the Biblical text itself. When an action, fact or teaching is absolutely demanded by the biblical information at hand—without being specifically stated—then that action, fact or teaching is a matter of implication. Such conclusions do not, as some allege, derive their authority from the one doing the concluding, but rather from God the author of the Bible who implied them.

A simple example is found in Jn.3:16. God loves the world and wants the world to be saved and thus He gave His Son—explicitly or directly stated. Implication—God so loved Brian Mitchell that He gave His only begotten Son. How do I know this is true, the text does not directly say this? I know this is true because I am a part of the world that God so loved and thus I may logically imply that He loved me and gave His Son for me that I would not perish.

It is often said that these are necessary inferences or implications. I do not, however, believe that it is necessary to use the word necessary. If something is implied by the Bible then it is necessary for us to obey it if it is addressing us. If it is not necessary for us to do something then it is not implied that we should by the Bible. It would actually be more correct to speak of valid and invalid implications then necessary ones. A valid implication is one that it is essential to reach both contextually and logically.

Logic—is the science of arriving at valid inferences or deductions. Regardless of what some may say it plays a very vital role in the process of determining what God does and does not want us to do. According to 1 Thes.5:21, we must use the Word of God and logic to test every belief we hold and every practice we engage in.

A valid inference or implication does not require that everyone agree that it is valid. At first, Paul could not get Jewish Christians to understand that from all he had taught them, that they should have been able to imply that God no longer required Gentiles who came into the church to also be circumcised. That, however, did not mean that such was indeed true. If through what the Bible explicitly says and reason we come to the conclusion that something is implied then it is authorized. And we may therefore obey it or not.
